Mr. Hoxsey stated after his flight that above a few thousand feet over the earth he had found the wind considerably easier to fight, and practically all his trouble was from excessive cold. His hands became so cold and lifeless that at times he could hardly feel the steering wheel. During the two hours and more while he was in the air Mr. Hoxsey covered a wide expanse of territory, ranging from the mountains on the north and east to the sea on the west. Several times he eavs that he was a mile and more out over the sea, but he attained his greatest altitude while on his way home on the last trip from Long Beach.

The same gale wrecked Mons. Latham's Antoinette. The Frenchman was among the aviators who answered the starting bomb at 1 o'clock. For two hours and fifteen minutes he fought the wind, which blew directly off the ocean, six miles from the aviation field Then an adverse current slapped his aeroplane downward, hurled it into a fence under the brow of a hill and threw the aviator into a gully. The machine was slashed, cut and torn almost to pieces by the fierce rapacity of souvenir hunters. Its propellers were broken and one of its wings was shat-

His battery car was found to be economical in operation and admirably adapted to urban passenger service.

In marine navigation one of the most interesting experiments of the year was begun by the Hamburg-American line, which ordered the construction of two nine-thousand-ton freight steamers, to be equipped with what are known as Diesel engines, operated by the internal combustion of petroleum. These ships will have no funnels, and the space required for the engines will be materially less than that occupied by the ordinary steam engines. It is predicted that 30 per cent of the energy of the fuel will be utilized, as type of steamers, and the cost of the president of the Baker iron works, who fuel will be 75 per cent less.
